

Examples of what we see	Type of work	Who owns copyright? (Where the Crown is not the copyright owner)	How long does the copyright last? (Where the Crown is not the copyright owner)
A painting or drawing	Artistic work	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. The artist or 2. The artist's employer if the work was made in the course of employment. This may be altered by agreement between the artist and employer. 3. The commissioner of a portrait for private or domestic use. 	For the life of the creator plus 70 years *
A sculpture displayed in public or private	A work of artistic craftsmanship	The sculptor (but if the sculpture is situated permanently in a public place, it is not an infringement of copyright to make a drawing, engraving, photograph of the sculpture or to include it in a film or television broadcast)	For the life of the sculptor plus 70 years*
An etching, a lithograph, photogravure(a process involving an etched print developed from a photograph) woodcut, print or similar work, but not a photograph	An engraving	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. The artist or 2. The artist's employer if the work was made in the course of employment. This may be altered by agreement between the painter and employer. 3. The commissioner of an engraving 	For the life of the creator plus 70 years* But if the engraving is published for the first time after the creator's death, copyright will continue until 70 years after the work is published
Photographs for commercial use such as photos on a postcard or coffee table book, or for private or domestic use such as wedding photos or holiday photos	A photograph	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. The artist – photographer 2. The artist's employer if the work was made in the course of employment. This may be altered by agreement between the photographer and employer. 3. The commissioner of photographs for private or domestic use. 	For the life of the creator plus 70 years* If published anonymously or published under pseudonym, copyright will last for 70 years after the work is published
Silver, pottery, wood and embroidery.	Works of artistic craftsmanship	<ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. The artist or 2. The artist's employer if the work was made in the course of employment. This may be altered by agreement between the painter and employer 	For the life of the creator plus 70 years*